In the predictable future, cash may be replaced by alternative options. People can pay by using credit cards, debit cards, electronic payment apps, or mobile payment services. Without cash, payments are processed electronically. That is, people transfer funds to another person or business instead of using paper currency and coins.

Some supporters claim the benefits of the cashless society. First, there will be less crime; illegal deals like money laundering and drug trade will reduce because every cashless transaction leaves a paper record. Furthermore, international payments will become much easier. When the two nations are able to handle cashless transactions, people do not have to buy local currency when going abroad.

While a zero-cash world seems appealing, some people are concerned about the disadvantages of it. They worry that personal information will be exposed to a high risk of abuse. Next, technology problems may cause inconvenience to people in accessing their money. Besides, those without bank accounts will have trouble paying and receiving payments.

In spite of the warnings and opposition, several nations have taken action to eliminate cash with the push from both the consumers and governments. They believe that with sufficient planning and proper measures to help people of all economic status adjust to the system, it is possible to make cash history.

- (D) Crime rate lowers because paper trails are required for electronic transaction.

36. Which of the following is NOT an example of “alternative options” shown in the first paragraph?

- (A) debit cards
- (B) mobile payment service
- (C) electronic payment apps
- (D) paper currency

37. According to the passage, what kind of people have problems surviving in a cashless society?

- (A) People who push the government to change.
- (B) Those who don't have a bank account.
- (C) People who use mobile payment apps.
- (D) Those who own sufficient credit cards.

Frozen shoulder is a condition featuring the stiffness and pain in your shoulder joint. It occurs when the connective tissue around the shoulder joint grows thick, tightens, and restricts the movement of the shoulder and the arm. You may be more familiar with another name of the diagnosis, “fifty shoulder,” since it is most frequently seen among patients aged between 40 and 60.

The painful symptoms of frozen shoulder develop in three stages. It begins with the freezing stage, when any movement of the shoulder causes pain. The pain is particularly severe at night, affecting the patient’s sleep. Then the frozen stage comes. Although the pain begins to settle and diminish during this stage, the shoulder becomes stiffer, which keeps the patients from doing overhead activities; some of them can’t even reach the opposite armpit and the back. The last phase is the thawing stage. As the word “thawing” implies, the shoulder stiffness eases like melting ice, and the shoulder is able to move with a wider range.

There are conservative and surgical treatments for frozen shoulders. Most frozen shoulders will get better within 18 months under conservative treatments, which involve the medications and the help from physical therapists. If the symptoms remain disturbing despite a period of intensive conservative treatments, the doctor may recommend some surgical procedures. After the surgery, it usually takes several months for the recovery.

A lack of movement is one of the common causes of frozen shoulder. If you happen to have an injury, a broken arm, or a stroke, and find it hard to move your shoulder, you should ask your doctor how you can maintain the range of motion in your shoulder joint. By doing so, you may have a better chance to avoid the annoying syndrome.

38. What is the passage mainly about?
- (A) To show medical students how to perform a surgery on the shoulder.
 - (B) To offer common ways for middle-aged people to remain healthy.
 - (C) To explain the causes, symptoms, and treatments of a shoulder problem.
 - (D) To raise questions about the regulations of producing frozen food.
39. The word “fifty” in the phrase “fifty shoulder” in paragraph 1 refers to _____.
- (A) age
 - (B) size
 - (C) weight
 - (D) distance
40. Which of the following has the closest meaning to the word “diminish” in paragraph 2?
- (A) celebrate
 - (B) apologize
 - (C) participate
 - (D) decrease
41. According to the passage, which of the following is true?
- (A) Patients with frozen shoulder usually have a quick recovery within days after the surgery.
 - (B) The connective tissues around the joint of a frozen shoulder are thicker and tighter.
 - (C) Most frozen shoulders can only improve with a number of surgical procedures.
 - (D) During the thawing stage, the patient’s shoulder is too stiff to move a bit.
